KENORA, Ont. — A soft-spoken middle-aged man who blew himself up with a dyna-mite bomb shortly after holding up a bank in this remote northern town was felled by a police bullet the instant before the explosion, police confirmed today.

Witnesses to the bizarre holdup and ex-plosion Thursday which scattered bits of flesh, broken glass and bank notes within a 300-foot area of the branch of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce on Main Street, said they heard one or possibly two shots before the explosion.

Kenora chief C. W. Engstrom, however, refused to confirm that police had fired at the bandit. But Insp. W. J. Mychalyshyn, head of the Ontario Provincial Police investigation in the case, said it had been confirmed that one police bullet struck the man before he blasted himself and the loot he carried with a six-stick dynamite bomb strapped around him.

The holdup man had warned manager Al Reid of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce that the bomb would detonate if anything happened to him.

It was wired to what he called a "dead man's switch," a clothespin-like device he al-ternately held pinched in his hand or clenched in his teeth.

The blast came about 30 seconds after the gunman left the bank, preceded by Con-stable Don Milliard who was to drive the get-away truck the man had ordered.

"AS YOU MAKE YOUR BED YOU MUST LIE ON IT"

This is an old English proverb, but taking the literal neaning word for word without interpretation, it behoves all of us to take great care when buying a bed . . . and instead of the word "bed" suppose we think of the word "mattress" . . . Only in recent years has it become clear to most people, that when buying a mattress one cannot be too careful about the quality of the mattress we choose. More and more people are realizing that the mattress they sleep on has an important effect on their health . . It is the common practice of people in the Western world to sleep in a bed . . . But there are some primitive people who manage to sleep in a squatting position . . . The Japanese sleep on the floor or ground without mattresses . Sailors manage to get a good night's sleep in hammocks . . . And, as every college student knows, almost anyone can learn to sleep sitting in an upright position . . . But if we sleep in a bed, then the choice of a mattress is very important, for we must remember that one-third of our lives is spent in bed . . . What are the best conditions in order to get a good night's sleep? . . . Darkness, quietness, a favourable room temperature, and an accustomed, COMFORTABLE MATTRESS to sleep on . . . These are the necessary requisites for a good night's sleep

This brings to mind the OSTEO-PEDIC MATTRESS which is obtainable at MACDONALD'S FURNITURE MART, 1420 BROAD STREET, who are the sole agents in Victoria for this wonderful mattress . . . This mattress is of firm construction throughout . . . It has a jumbo taped edge, with a quilted border . . . It has hundreds of "multi-lastic" coils in "flexolater" sheathing . . . This takes care of the unpleasant "popping of the springs" which one finds in some mattresses . . . Do you suffer from a sore back for the first hour after rising from your bed? . . . Then you had better get an OSTEO-PEDIC MATTRESS without delay, the price is amazingly low! . . . Why pay $230 and up to $300 for a mattress unit of this quality when MACDONALD'S can supply you with one, including the Supporting Base, for 169.95 . . . and give you a 20 year guarantee . . . OSTEO-PEDIC denotes EXCELLENCE . . .

Call at MACDONALD'S FURNITURE MART, at the corner of PANDORA and BROAD STREETS and view these wonderful mattresses and supporting base. Inspect them at your leisure, without any obligation to buy.

In other developments: Attorney-General designate Elliott Richardson, vowing to stay at "arm's length" from the White House in pursuing the Watergate scandal, said Thursday he has no intention of "going easy" on anyone involved. He assured the Senate judiciary committee that he would not even try to stop the special Watergate prosecutor he plans to enlist from press-ing for "personal testimony" from Nixon himself.

OTTAWA (CP) - The television pirates of Ross River, Y.T., likely will become legal before long.

The community of about 300 kidnapped a CBC television signal early in April with the aid of a home-made TV relay at Faro, Y.T., 40 miles away.

A representative of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission (CRTC) visited Ross River recently to advise the pirates on the procedure to be followed in legalizing their rebroadcasting station.

The conflict in this part of the Pacific has been clearly defined. Canadians consider salmon originating in the Fraser River system to be Canadian fish. Americans claim a legal and ethical right to share in the harvest of the migrants as they pass through waters off Vancouver Island and up the Strait of Juan de Fuce on their way to the natal streams. The United States claim is based on earlier arrangements under which American funds were contributed to improve the Fraser for spawning migrations. For this compensation was furnished in the form of a share of the Fraser River runs for American boats. Canada recently has announced its decision to decline further American financial contributions and to lower the American share accordingly.

On their side, the Americans have protested what they consider disproportionate hauls of Washington state hatchery fish by Canadians as they move southward off Vancouver Island shores to their natal grounds. These fish, say the Americans, are American fish.

Each nation is in a position to injure the other by taking larger quantities from stocks claimed by the other. Ultimately such a procedure would result in runs so depleted that everyone would lose.

At this juncture both appear to have advanced solutions to the problem tailored to their own interests and mutually unacceptable.

In broad perspective the situation today is regrettable insofar as it marks a revival of hostility between fishing nations which, despite earlier and recurrent differences, were able to work sufficiently in concert to permit sound conservation. The crunch has come because each wants the most it can get, Canadians justifying their stand on the grounds that they are concerned mainly with Fraser River - i.e. Canadian - fish.

For the time being, fish only appear to be in the scales. As the bargaining grows tougher, other factors will be added - market arrangements, tariffs perhaps, and whatever muscle either nation believes it can use to advantage.

A loose analogy has been drawn between conditions in this part of the Pacific with those existing in the waters off Iceland. Other comparisons might be made.

In the meantime, on a loftier plane, international thought is given to the world food supply to be drawn from the oceans without exhausting them. That is a principle involved in the coming Law of the Sea convention. On the basis of differences here and elsewhere, those charting the international meeting can only assume that the barometer is falling and stormy days are ahead.

A Certain Peace of Mind

The old gardener who lives down our country lane could be observed today planting his fiftieth vegetable garden gnarled figure like the oak trees around him and of almost the same age. The work which had seemed so easy in his youth was harder now but it had a new compensation. For the first time he felt honest and acceptable to society.

In all the previous half century he planted seeds with a certain twinge of conscience. By growing vegetables for himself, or mostly for his neighbors, he had increased the vast food surplus of the world, competing unfairly with the farmers, helping to keep their prices too low and damaging the economic system. In those days it was patriotic to consume and stimulate the economy, unpatriotic to produce and depress it.

Great Change

Recently, however, things had changed and, this spring, his conscience was clear. No one could criticize him for growing food when it was scarce. No one considered its price too low, except perhaps the farmers. Even the Canadian government, in moments of private candor, must regret its slaughter of a million chickens last year to raise the price of eggs, its sleepless nights haunted by feathery ghosts. So, instead of a social delinquent, the gardener had become a respectable citizen and his production, ough minor, an asset instead of a liability. He slept soundly again.

It might even be possible, he thought, that society itself was coming to its senses at last. No, this was too much to expect so early in the world's approaching mass hunger. All Canadians, except the farmers, complained bitterly about the price of food, the primary essential of life, but they eagerly bought unessential goods at any price, spending enough on a new automobile, for instance, to keep the household larder full for a the gardener's rich friends had just returned from Hawaii with a tan that cost several thousand dollars, and, leaning over the fence, had spent half an hour passionately denouncing the government because it had failed to control the price of beef. And this man's wife, with most other housewives, had boycotted the meat markets but you never heard of them boycotting the beauty parlors or cosmetic counters.

Human beings, the gardener concluded, were a queer species. That thought might not be exactly original but it was clarified and confirmed by the more reliable process of the soil, the steady growth, the opulent harvest, the feel of seeds in his fingers like a tiny electric spark of life, a new life yet to quicken touching an old life soon to end.

Mankind was doubtless crazier than usual this year as Watergates all over the world opened to spill unknown consequences much more important than the personal destiny of President Nixon, but nature seemed to retain her sanity, despite the flood. Still, there were encouramong humans.

The government of Canada and the United States, having long discouraged the production of food, now pleaded with the farmers to produce more and urged city householders to grow pathetic little crops in the back yards of the richest continent on earth. The governments also urged everyone to conserve energy (while promising to build new industries of all sorts requiring more energy in unlimited volume). So far, the encouraging symptoms were somewhat spotty.

Kneeling down to sprinkle the seeds along the rows, in every gardener's nondenominational posture of worship, he reflected on society's posture. At the moment it favored production, even the production of food, but it disfavored the man who consumed less than he produced, took from the economy less than his money could command, asked no subsidy from the state and saved something for a rainy day, or a drought. Such a man was judged to be anti-social and reactionary. He could even be an illiberal red-neck by Mr. Trudeau's latest

A Little Sunlight

Well, the gardener's neck was red, all right, from the May sun but that guilty hue did not humiliate him, or penetrate his conscience any longer, though perhaps it should. Indeed, he suspected that the government itself and all the politicians would be improved by exposure to sunlight now and then outside the gloomy halls of Parliament.

On the other hand, it was lucky that government remained indoors, with a white neck, or otherwise it might discover the tax evasion of all gardeners like himself. For in the returns filed a few days ago all of them had cheated outrageously. all had concealed their most valuable income, their yield of real, edible wealth and their capital gains of tree a certain peace of mind unknown to the unfortunate inhabitants of Parliament

Happily government had not yet discovered these extra revenue sources or they would have already closed the gaping tax loopholes. Best not to tell the secret. Best to leave those Ottawa necks white and pity them in their hot house where no food grew, only the inedible debating points of perpetual crop failure.

Rubbing his own neck, hot and incarnadine by now, the gardener surveyed his work and found it pretty good. The seeds planted 10 days earlier were swelling and germinating faster than the Gross National Product, inflating themselves faster than the price index. Their green thrust, innocent of any telltale red, minute but with strength unimaginable. had broken through the earth's hard rind. Until the actual meaning of that statement is clarified, it can provide little satisfaction to the public. The public has a sensitive nerve on refitting Canadian ships as a result. The longer the taxpayers are kept in the dark about the Restigouche, the touchier they will become. ## Waves on the Rising Tide

WASHINGTON - To get his show back on the road, President Nixon will need to lean harder against some of those problems that disturb Americans more than Watergate, and the chief among these is inflation.

Few really believe the government's hand is still earnestly applied to the task of checking the rise in wages and prices. Phase Two had the merit of seeming to he much more than it was. Phase Three has the crucial weakness of seeming to be much less than the situation requires. The public's mood is the key to the war against inflation, and Phase Three is not exciting hopes that the war will be won.

Within the government, officials take comfort, even pride in the unfolding pattern of wage agreements. The railroad workers came to a reasonable settlement because they won large slices of non-taxable retirement pay. The rubber workers accepted a non-inflationary increase because they fear competition from the new plants their own companies are building abroad.

Tractable Mood

The point is that these key developments have not sprung from confidence in the potential of Phase Three. And it is not the reason why factory workers' settlements in the first quarter averaged only 6.5 per cent or why non-manufacturing settlements averaged only 4.7 per cent. It is not the reason for the softening of construction industry settlements in the first quarter to a new low of 4.5

per cent. The real meaning of these statistics is that labor began the year in a tractable mood, ready to co-operate in a genuine reach for wage-price stability. The working man, despite all he had heard about equities of the Nixon plan, saw his pay cheque stretching farther, so he was willing to gamble that, if he curped his appetite for higher wages, the governent would reciprocate by holding the lid on prices. But the administration went into retreat at the first of the year. The performance has been a fiasco of leadership torn between its dogma and the realities. The cushioned announcement of Phase Three is conceded now to have been a mistake, even within the White House, and that bad start has been compounded by fumbling all the way. At every turn the administration has seemed bent on doing less than the situation requires.

GEORGE MEANY . . . ample reasons

So George Meany and the labor press are finding ample reasons to insist that the working man is being asked to sacrifice while others indulge their greed. A good example is the next big settlement, the electrical workers' contract with General Electric and Westinghouse. The public record shows that the chairman of GE, Fred Borch, drew remuneration that increased 72 per cent (from $302,813 to $516,543) during 1972.

His GE associates report that Borch's oluments were swollen by some "deferred incentive compensation" that was coming to him because he retired at the end of the year. But statistics published by Business Week show that the net earnings of all top executives of the electrical equipment companies rose an average of 16.5 per cent during 1972. Why will the electrical worker be willing to settle for 6 per cent?

Cream at the Top

Similarly in the auto industry, where the most portentous negotiations will occur in August, the average increase in the remuheration of top executives was 47.9 per cent. Lynn Townsend, chairman of the Chrysler Corp., went from $210,000 to $649,850 for a 209 per cent increase. As Business Week observes editorially, "It is a little hard to see why more corporate managers did not elect to put themselves on the same basis as their

Most of the big companies are proclaiming record profits, and these are duly reported in the labor press without notice that the Phase Two limits on dividend increases are still in effect. Because Arthur Burns of the Fed is willing to play a tougher game than George Shultz of the Treasury, executives fattening their pay cheques are inhibited from giving more than 4 per cent increases to the shareholders.

Phase Three is not convincing and people don't believe in it. It seems certo serve as the prelude to a new round of inflation unless President Nixon comes forward with new determination to stand against the rising tide.

LCB have been importing for years Portuguese, Chilean; Australian, South African, Italian and American dry red wines which do have the right taste. The three like-minded groups were the Ottawa-based Canadian Loyalist Association which has as its main tenets the maintenance of the Canadian federation as it existed in 1867, retention of the monarchy and preservation of the parliamentary system; the Dominion of Canada English-Speaking Association which has been fighting the introduc-tion of bilingual federal serv-ices in New Brunswick; and the Western Canada Party which seeks, among other things, to make English the official language of the

there was no forum for English-Canadian opposition to the bill because no political party-would stand up against it, (All parties supported the bill, although 17 Conservatives split with their leader to

It is one thing to dismiss the Canadian Loyalists and their associates as reactionary crackpots. It is quite another thing, however, to conclude that the 35 angry people who assemblyed at the motel speak only for themselves.

There are, unfortunately, many people out there in English Canada who still fear and resent anything and everything that is French. Their antipathy toward bilingualism in the federal civil service is in no way diluted by the fact that no one has forced them to learn French in the four years since the act became law, that their sons concentration camps in Quebec, that their daughters have not succumbed to the blan-dishments of smooth-talking Gallic gentlemen in striped

A resolution is waiting on the Commons order paper. In essence, it asks MPs to reaf-firm the official Languages Act by giving their endorse-ment once again to the principle of bilingualism in the pub-lic service, along with approval of a stretched-out schedule for phasing in bilingualism.

Although one might question why Parliament should be asked to reaffirm the Languages Act and not other federal statutes, it is not difficult to sympathize with French-speaking Liberals who interpreted the last election results as a repudiation of the Government's language policies. At the same time, one can understand why some Conservatives feel the resolution is a Liberal attempt to turn Tory against Tory on the language issue. If nothing

WORTHY GOAL, BUT COST IS HIGH

Paying for Retirement at 60

THE TORONTO STAR

Ontario has put forward an attractive idea—optional retirement at 60 — but with it an in a dequate proposal for higher Canada Pension Plan

At the federal-provincial conference of welfare min-isters, Ontario proposed that Canada Pension Plan con-tributions be raised to support a maximum retirement benefit at 65 of $192 a month in 1976. But this would be ac-1976. But this would be actuarially reduced to about $115 for a person retiring at 60. And, judging by present experience, the average benefit would be only three-fifths of the maximum, or $69 a month. Who can afford to retire on that? Certainly not the majority of Canadians who are uncovered by any private pension plan and who have no other majority.

There's a growing feeling that in a rich country, people who don't want to keep working until 65 shouldn't have to. We agree with that; but the full cost implications of retirement at 60 must be faced. There are about 45 Canadi-

other public pension available at age 60.

An Editorial ans aged 60 to 64 for every 100 Canadians who are at the pensionable ages of 65 and over. This means that if retirement at 60 became the norm, the total public and private pension payout would have to rise by 45 per cent just to maintain existing benefit levels. To assure subsistence to Canadians who aren't covered by private pension plans, it would be necessary to lower the qualifying age for the old age security pension from 65 to 60. If the pension remained universal — the amount has universal — the amount has just been raised to $100 a nonth — this would cost near-y an extra $1 billion a year. That's without any guaranteed income supplement or cost-of-living escalator for the

and three out of five Canadians in the labor force had no company pensions in 1970 — is not the sort of comfortable retirement that allows for winter cruises. We are talking about a pension worth $200 a month, or a little less, at curhave a similar impact on company and civil service pension plans. To produce a pension at 60 as good as the pension due at 65, contributions - by employees or the company or jointly — would have to be raised. Contribu-tions to all private and civil service plans totalled $1.7 billion in 1970; at least $850 million would be added to the annual pension bill immediately.

So the cost of general retirement at 60, to both public and private pension funds, would probably exceed $2 bil-lion a year at the start. That's an average extra cost of about $230 a year for everyone remaining in the labor

Nevertheless, we believe the Ontario principle of op-tional retirement at 60 is cor-rect and should be pursued. But to keep the costs bear-able, the actuarially sound practice of paying much higher pensions at 65 than at 60 should be maintained.

Governments must consider the question of fairness in pensions. Our mixed public and private system has little of either now. An average worker whose company has no pension plan gets only $192 a month in combined public pensions and supplement on retirement at 65. A steelworker may draw a non-con-tributory pension of $435 a month at 60 after 30 years' $1,500 a month at the same age. Must the inequality of reward accepted during our working lives carry over full force among those who have ceased to contribute to the

A LOOK AT LEISURE

It Isn't Easy Being Lazy

Much has been said about the "prob-lem" of leisure. Boredom. Devil's time. Guaranteed annual income. Three-day and four-day weekends. Judy LaMarsh, the former health and welfare minister time by drinking and "fornicating with the visiting telephone man." Others have warned of calamitous global tensions as poor countries become increas ingly envious of leisure in rich coun-

After an absence of eight months, I am back at work.

The eight months enabled me to experience the trauma of having nothing more to do than go to bed, get up, and do whatever I felt like in between, on full salary. There is an art to doing nothing — "freebling" has been coined to describe just sitting around, being unimportant — and I must admit I have a long way to go to master it. The eight months went quickly.

I think I worked too hard on my, leisure. That is a fault of a lazy person.

Hard to Begin

Thomas Wolfe said in You Can't Go Home Again that truly lazy people often to the most work because they know how agonizing it is to begin something, to drag oneself from life's hammock, and so when they find themselves ac-tive they dare not stop lest they never start again. It is like driving a car started by crossing the wires. "I am ac-tive because I hate activity," Nerzhin says in Solzhenitsyn's The First Circle.

There were problems: leisure and sell-esteem, leisure and guilt, leisure and the family—and fem lib. When a husband gets leisure how can he comportably sit around, being unimportant, when his wife still must cope with children and dishes and meals and prying rum off the floor? gum off the floor?

One's self-awareness is brutally enhanced. Eight months ago I had silly thoughts of emerging from the ordeal a new man: hard, svelte, seasoned.

Today I weigh two pounds less, my waist is the same, my hair is greyer, and when I stepped off the elevator on

Came to Grief

"I never had any will power," he told students at the University of Wind-sor last year. "I knew a few people who possessed it in high degree and I regret to say that every one of them has come to grief. They told fate what they wanted in demanding and inflexible tones and fate just rolled right over them like the Car of Juggernaut."

Professor Davies knows, too, the danger of too much reading. At one point in his life, he told a group of us, pictures and images disappeared from his dreams. He dreamt in words—print! It was a shocking experience and he stopped reading at once. Eventually the pictures and images returned.

Not much can be done about leisure and guilt, unfortunately. The work ethic is stamped on us and it will take years for time to wash it away. I've found help in Adlous Huxley's foreword to Brave New World, which could be a comfort on New Year's Day as well as in the coming age of leisure.

"Chronic remorse, as all the moral-"Chronic remorse, as all the moralists are agreed, is a most undesirable sentiment," he wrote. "If you have behaved badly, repent, make what amends you can and address yourself to the task of behaving better next time. On no account brood over your wrong-doing. Personally, I find humming helps to camouflage guilt. Sleeping, too.

But Cocke told reporters: "I am certainly not going to muzzle him (Foulkes)."

The minister was commenting on recent criticism of Foulkes by BCMA president Dr. David Bachop and a strongly-worded article in the BCMA News. The attacks on the government's health services consultant arose out of a newspaper interview in which he charged that B.C. doctors choose patients who require more expensive surgical procedures over those who need only routine care because it pays better.

Cocke said Foulkes accompanied him to Ottawa earlier this week for the joint meeting of federal and provincial health and finance ministers, and they had "general discussions" on a number of topics.

The government has no means of forcing two doctors who plan to leave the town of Ashcroft to remain there, Health Minister Dennis Cocke said Thursday.

"There are no steps you can take in a free society to say to somebody that you have to stay where you are. What we can do of course is to encourage other people to go there and take their place, which is what we'll be doing."

EVERYONE knows it's foolish to hide savings dollars in a mattress.

Everyone's heard the old adage, "money makes

But many people simply don't understand how to put their money to work. How to invest their savings dollars in the kind of securities that offer a chance to protect their dollars from inflation, and give them the income they want.

What do we mean by savings?

By savings, we mean any lump sum, in cash or securities, for which you have no immediate need. The $487 your teenager managed to put away from last summer's job is savings.

So is the $300,000 your neighbour got when he sold his business. While it isn't money actually saved, it certainly represents a lifetime of savings

And an inheritance is savings too. Someone else's savings that he wants you to have.

Savings are dollars put aside, literally or not. Dollars for which there is no immediate need. Extra dollars.

Why invest extra dollars?

Historically, the dollar buys a little less each year.

Inflation keeps pushing costs up and the value of the dollar down. It's been doing this at a rate of between 3% and 5% per year.

If you put your savings in a savings account you get between 4% and 5% interest, and so keep even with inflation, and of course have the principal protected and readily available for emergencies. And you have to pay full income tax on your interest.

But there are other ways that your hard-earned savings can serve you.

Many securities have done far more than keep up with inflation. There are plenty of good stocks that have grown in value from 8% to 10% each

Isn't that the way you'd like to see your savings

At Merrill Lynch, Royal Securities we believe you should give some of your savings a chance to work harder. You worked hard to earn them, didn't you?

What investments should you make?

That depends on how much money you have to invest, and what you hope to do with any money your money might make.

You need to know your financial objectives.

Do you want to invest your savings for an early retirement?

Do you want to put them into incomeproducing securities, like bonds and preferreds, and so augment your income right now?

Have you the temperament and resources to invest for short-term gain? If you're prepared to take some risk there are stocks that your Merrill Lynch, Royal Securities account executive will recommend. Just remember risk and return on the stock market work together. Where there is a chance of good gain, there is also a chance of

Most Canadians who invest their savings want to see them grow. But risk-taking is not for

At Merrill Lynch, Royal Securities we can show you the kinds of investments that could best suit your objectives, no matter what, they are.

If you're scared of the stock market

We talk to a lot of people each year who are scared of the stock market. They've had little experience with stocks, and they're afraid of losing some of their savings.

That's not as likely if you're careful and follow the advice of a reputable broker and investigate before you invest. Stay away from the so-called penny stocks and stick with the stocks your broker

If we follow a stock at Merrill Lynch, Royal Securities that means our Research Department has made a careful study of it.

They follow over 265 Canadian stocks and put their opinion on most of them into a computerized retrieval system called QRQ (Quick Research Query). With QRQ at his fingertips a Merrill Lynch, Royal Securities account executive can get our opinion on any one of those stocks within minutes.

Of course we're not infallible.

But we believe that any investor who bases his investment decision on arduous research carried out by trained analysts has a better chance.

Keep your cool

Common sense is one key to wise investing, so use it. Never get carried away when you invest.

Spread your investments and don't make the age-old mistake of falling in love with one stock and blindly putting everything you have into it. It hardly ever pays off.

If you know something about a particular area of industry, through your job or your interests, use that to advantage. Look for wise investments in that industry. Don't panic and sell right away if your stock starts to fall off. Your broker may be able to advise you as to what is happening and what you should Use your broker. He's there to help you, but he'll never know you need his help if you don't call and ask him.

Where do you start?

A good way to start putting those extra savings to work is to read a booklet we have just reprinted called How to Invest.

It's a comprehensive collection of investment information, and should be of value to any Canadians with money to invest.

If you'd like a copy of How to Invest, write to: How to Invest, Dept. R4, P.O. Box 31, Toronto-Dominion Centre, Toronto, Ontario M5K 1C2. There's no charge or obligation.

A good place to start your investment program is at the Merrill Lynch, Royal Securities office

Call or visit, and ask for the manager.

Tell him you'd like to open an account.

Well him how much money you have to invest and what your investment objectives are.

He'll match you up with an account executive he feels will suit you. Someone who'll show you how to apply the Merrill Lynch, Royal Securities brand of common sense to all your investing. Someone who'll help you put your money to work.

The first major decision for an employer is whether to try to operate during a strike and, if not, detailed plans on shutting down are needed.

All local authorities, such as police and fire departments, should be told in advance.

"Advance planning is required if the police are to be properly prepared to preserve order on the picket line and if your employees and property are to be adequately protect-ed. It is the duty of the police to provide this protection and their full co-operation and assistance is to be expected. If it can be arranged for the police to be on hand at the start of the strike, a sense of law and order can be instilled in the situation which will likely prevent trouble on the picket line from arising later in the strike.'

Grit Bolts Over Prices

OTTAWA (CP) — A Liberal backbencher bolted ranks in the Commons Thursday night to support Conservative demands for immediate controls to halt the inflation spiral.

Ross Whicher, who represents the Ontario riding of Bruce, told the Commons he does not accept government arguments that wage and price controls will not work in Canada merely because they Conservative members who have hounded the government for action to control inflation, moved Thursday to deplore the situation and urge a temporary wage and price freeze.

James Gillies (PC-Toronto Don Valley) said Canadians can no longer bear the cost of inflation or the old-fashioned techniques for fighting it will deny that inflation is hurting every Canadian. However, the Conservative-suggested freeze was a vague, ill-defined idea that would only increase infla-tion, he said.

The government did not want wage and price controls unless it thought they would benefit the people. Controls had not worked in the United States or Britain and the government did not think they would work here, he said.

Besides, said Turner, there would have to be a national consensus on controls. Ontario had just increased its sales tax, indicating it did not favor a freeze and none of the other provinces had shown any enthusiasm for restrictions.

New Democrat leader David Lewis took on both the Liberals and the Conserva-tives, describing Turner's approach to the cost-of-living question as "complacent" and that of the Conservatives as "negative, destructive and

Third Appeal Defeated In Expropriation Case

The only avenue left for William Coburn after four years of courtroom battling is the Supreme Court of Canada.

Coburn Thursday lost his third appeal against an expropriation settlement.

Mr. Justice H. A. Maclean described the appeal as "an exercise in futility which is like skinning a flea for its hide and tallow."

The Coburn family locked themselves into the home and brandished rifles from an upstairs window and front door when city officials tried to force their way into the house to carry out an eviction order on Feb. 1, 1969.

The officials called off an house because of the threat of violence. Several days later the Coburns left quietly and, within a week, the 60-year-old house was demolished.

Coburn was paid $12,500 by the city for the house and lot.

Vietoria county court judge M. L. Drake, appointed arbitrator under the Municipal Act, rejected an application by Coburn for an extra $5,000 in December, 1969.

Drake said market value alone is the measure of com-pensation for expropriated property. He accepted $11,100 as the value of Coburn's.

The ruling was appealed in B.C. Supreme Court before Mr. Justice F. C. Munroe, who ordered the case be reconsidered by the arbitrator. According to documents peal Thursday, Munroe held that 'the arbitrator had mea-sured the compensation by a determination of the market value of the property alone, without regard to other considerations which might affect the value to the owners."

Another appeal was filed before the late Mr. Justice George Gregory on July 16, 1971. It was dismissed.

The Commune That Died From Lack of Know-How

The organic gardening commune out our way, about which I enthused last year around this time, is no more. There were anywhere from eight to a dozen young men and women on the occasions when I visited them, convinced that they could make ends meet by selling their produce in town. They were just as wrong as wrong can be. The income did not begin to meet the eveneses. They've gone their severate. not begin to meet the expenses. They've gone their separate

That, it seems, has been the disillusioning experience of a number of these return-to-nature experiments that I thought to be so admirable and that, in fact, worked mighty well in every aspect except the economic.

One perhaps inevitable result is that the back-to-the-land movement by a younger generation, a healthy balance to the three out of four farm children who continue to desert the rural areas for the city, has slowed to a trickle. "Organic gardening," itself, once the attraction, no longer has the ap-

Time was, because I'd written so often about it, when I received at least a couple of letters every day asking for advice on how to go about locating in the country, letters of such tremendous naivete and idealism that I felt downright guilty in giving a practical, realistic answer. Now it's a rare week when there's even one such letter.

If the organic growing idea was just a passing phase it's a pity because, without that motivation, there will be many young men — and young women, too — who may remain totally unaware that life on the farm still has much to offer as a career and as a style of living.

My advice now, as it was then, is simply that there's no great difficulty in finding out if that's what they really want. One summer on a farm provides that answer. Already there's the usual "Help Wanted" ads for summer-help. The wages are small by eity standards. But the experience is still worth

Those young people I've sent that way and who have told me about their experiences have learned two things that, it seems, were not learned by the eager amateurs in the commune I admired.

One is that "tarming" is a mighty loose word for what would be more fittingly called the profession of agriculture. As much as any industry it demands new methods, new techniques, specializing and acquired skills, very often repugnant to the lad who thinks you simply put the seed in the ground and stand back to wait for the miracle.

The second fact-of-life that's learned is that farming takes an education. Old-time farmers, like old-time newspapermen, may scoff at the need for university training. But wherever you go in the country these days you'll find that the real pioneering is most often the work of the graduates in ag-

The boys who are leaving the farms are usually in a revolt against old-fashioned, traditional methods and unaware, perhaps, that the challenge to them, as it is to the city

by, is to progress with the times.

When we lived in the country one of our neighbors was a poultryman whose son had fought with just such an agonizing decision. The father scraped together enough to send him to an agriculture college more as a compromise than anything else. He took the attitude that it would do the boy no harm and that, when it was over, he might come back and carry on the business. The boy came back, right enough, but not passively. He came back with ideas and experiments and the kind of production evolution that may be found in most aspects of farm life today. The father resisted, but not for long. Today they're equal partners in a thriving business that owes as much to the old man's years of sacrifice and labor as it does to the young man's ambition and educati

It's not an example, I concede, that applies to directly to the city boy dreaming of a new life out there in the green pastures. He'll have to start from scratch. But it shows, I think, that country life is no more static than life here among

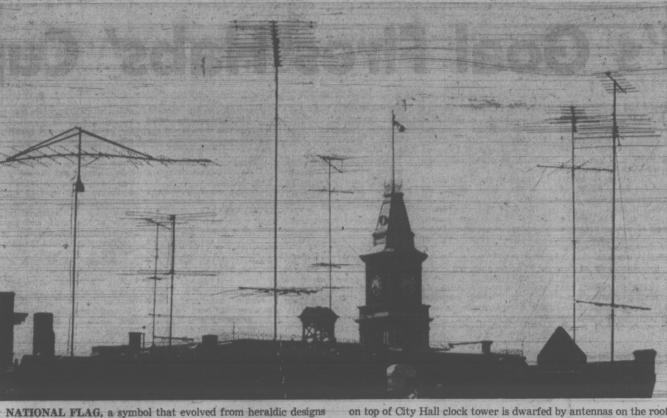

Apart from such considerations I'm completely convinced that, all things being equal, the man in the country gets more out of life than the man in the city.

The late Lew Gordon, the greatest city editor for whom I ever worked and a man who, himself, retired to the sticks to breed mink, once told me that his primary aim in life was total independence. "I never want to be in a position where I can't tell anyone to go to hell," as he put it.

Well, it's true that the farmer is just as dependent on the whims of regional or national economics and more dependent than the rest of us on the whims of the weather. But it is true, too, that he has that priceless-sense of self-reliance that so few of us ever enjoy in city life.

"I grow things that people eat," a farmer once told me what may be the definitive statement, "and people always

This seems to me the basic reason that country people often appear to get more out of life. Independence is the root of their philosophy. It gives them a purpose and an integrity that is their own. The boys and gifts at the organic gardening commune had precisely that in mind. The tragedy is that just wanting it is not enough.

in the days when it was impossible to tell one knight in armor from another without a program, looks as though it is fighting a last-ditch battle against attacking television antennae. The flag on top of City Hall clock tower is dwarfed by antennas on the roof of Pandora Avenue apartment. Flag and antennas have at least one thing in common — both were designed for long-distance communication. (John McKay photo.)

By PAT DUFOUR Times Staff

54 - foot $170,000 marine science research vessel is being planned for the University of Victoria and could be ready to go into operation by the end of the year.

Dr. G. O. Mackie, chairman of the biology department, said no tenders have been called so "we have no firm price as yet. But it is expected that, completely equipped for oceanographic research, the vessel will cost approximately $170,000."

Designed by naval architect David Moore of Vancouver, the ship is basically a gillnetter design.

Dr. Jack Littlepage, project co-ordinator for the new vessel, explains why the gillnet-ter design was chosen:

Lin Rite wants to put up a free-standing sign in full view of points on the Causeway. Pollard told the chambers hearing it is "urgent" that the business "capture" the trade by getting the sign up soon.

Lin Rite claims that it did everything by the book in attempting to get a sign permit from city hall, but has been refused.

Lindholm's objections were on technical grounds and no evidence was heard.

Munroe said that if he ignored the preliminary objections, they might easily arise again in an appeal.

After a short adjournment, Pollard told Munroe that he and Lindholm had reached an "impasse" on the matter of the objections, so Munroe dismissed the application-while retaining the right of Lin Rite to reapply for the court order after 48 hours.

Hockey: Curbing The Vicious Element

Where does hockey end and dangerous play begin?

Coach Terry Henning of Humboldt Broncos (juniors) pulled his team out of a series with Portage La Prairie because he felt play was excessively dirty and six of his players had been injured in five games between the clubs.

Coach Norm Hackett of the UVic Norsemen pulled his team off the ice in a game against Chemainus in February because he had been instructed by his superior, UVic Athletic Director Mike Elcock, to remove any team from the ice if he (the coach) felt there was "extreme provocation, provocation which made a mockery of the game."

Both coaches were suspended, Henning indefinitely and Hackett for a year. Were the coaches right in what they did? Was there suf-Were the coaches right in what they did? was there sui-ficient provocation? Should the coaches have had a hearing? Were the suspensions too severe? There are many questions, and some are being mentioned here because of the se-pulchral sounds now being heard across the land concerning hockey and its wellbeing There is little point in repeating all the various incidents which led to the "dirty-hockey" charges and the subsequent action by the coaches, suffice to say it appears they were acting in what they thought was good faith. They were protecting their players and took this course of action to point up the

No Courtesy of a Reply

In return, the respective hockey associations had no recourse but to act as they did. People just can't go around pulling teams off the floor either. Besides, it would be impossible to grant every hockey coach, or player, who is suspended (there were 103 in B.C. last season) an immediate hearing. By and large these executives do a good job. They can't

Ivan Temple, secretary-manager of the BCAHA, explains there is a right of appeal, but this can only be heard before the full directorate which meets once or twice a year. Thus it follows that a coach or player conceivably could sit out half a year or more before being granted an appeal, and then apparently at his own expense.

This situation has upset Elcock no end. He feels Hackett has been unfairly dealt with and the suspension was made without all the facts being investigated. In a letter to Ray Peebles, BCAHA president, he says: "I must protest most vehemently your decision to suspend Mr. Norm Hackett for a period of one year ... the fault with Mr. Hackett's action, if any should be placed, lies only if consideration for the well-being of his players is a wrong attitude and if the BCAHA being of his players is a wrong attitude and, if the BCAHA insists on placing blame, then it should rightfully be placed on me, for it was under my instructions Mr. Hackett acted."

Elcock also suggested it was incumbent on coaches to protect the life and limb of their players if hockey really was a game and not the pursuit of fisticuffs and "butt-ending." He protect the life and limb of their players it noticely really was a game and not the pursuit of fisticuffs and "butt-ending." He asked Peebles to reconsider his action, and so did Padre J. A. Roberts, president of the Vancouver Island Hockey League, who said in a letter . . . "The plain part of the matter is that you acted without sufficient evidence. . . " Elcock's letter was dated March 13. But to date "neither Padre Debett, and was also had the courtesy of a reply." Roberts nor myself have even had the courtesy of a reply.

'Quasi-Criminal Frustrations'

What Mike's utterances add up to is a rap against the BCAHA in general and its handling of the Hackett case in particular. Perhaps it is appropriate for Eloock to complain. Hackett is his coach, and was following orders. Still the BCAHA has no authority over Eloock, only Hackett. The point can be made that the Norsemen were being roughed up—the game report shows the penalty toll in minutes heavily in favor of Chemainus (apparently the referee was attempting to keep things under control) — but it does appear singularly inappropriate to suggest "Chemainus players were guilty of working off quasi-criminal frustrations against players half their size, with half their experience, but perhaps twice their intelligence and ability.

At any rate, whether Hackett's pull-out was well founded or not, he stands suspended. But wouldn't it have been the decent thing for Mr. Peebles to have at least acknowledged the letters from Elcock and Roberts? There may even have been extenuating circumstances. Who knows?

Unfortunately, it's true that some players are rough, even dirty, always will be, and would rather fight than eat.

And sure hooker isn't necessarily coing to change overnight.

And sure, hockey isn't necessarily going to change overnight. By the simple nature of its physical contact it has to be a rough and robust sport; and nobody really wants it otherwise, within reason of course.

But just as obviously, some new guidelines are needed to prevent more violence sneaking into the sport; there should be new and tougher rules to curb the rowdies; and frankly, far less tolerance to dirty play by officials and players alike.

Little 'Lost' Lobster In Red Snapper's Mouth

Some rambling notes along the trail:

We had a quiet chuckle over some news from Ottawa on Wednesday . . It seems officials of the federal fisheries department had to admit, during testimony before a Commons committee, they didn't know what has become of the mons committee, they didn't know what has become of the offspring of lobsters transplanted from the east coast to Fatty Basin on the west coast of Vancouver Island . Apparently the lobsters managed to reproduce, but when it came time for the free-swimming larvae to settle down on the ocean floor, nary a one was found . Shrimp fishermen have reported picking up little lobsters far from the transplant site and late last week we received a call from Victoria troller fishermen. John Harrisco. tisherman John Harrison, who was wondering what to do with an unusual catch . . While fishing about eight miles off Carmanah Point, in about 40 fathoms of water, he pulled in a red spaner. red snapper... And guess what popped out of its mouth?... After we advised him to take his find to federal fisheries, Harrison called back to say they had confirmed his catch's "catch" was a two-inch lobster... The area where it was found is approximately 40 miles by water from the transplant site.

Archers lorded it—over shotgunners, handgunners and rille shooters in the annual inter-division match of the Victoria Fish and Game Protective Association at the group's Goldstream grounds Sunday... Course of fire consisted of 30 birds at trap (16 yards, handicap and doubles), 15 standing shots with a-rifle, 15 standing shots with a handgun and 25 arrows with the bow at 20 yards... Members of the archery division piled up a 356 average to collect the "Well Shot" trophy, riflemen were second with 351, trap shooters were next at 329 and handgunners finished last with 228... Jack Thurber, a past Saskatchewan archery champion, understandably won that division with 125 out of 125 and emerged as the top individual shooter with 428 points... Runner-up was rifleman Garry Williams with 412... Trap shooters Ron McLaren and Doug Vidal tied for top shotgun honors with duplicate 24s (or equalized scores of 120)... The strapping backfielder raced strapping backfielder raced between two startled defenders, switched on the after-burners and shot away, un-touched, for a try between the

The score at the time had been 30-23 for the Anti-Assassins and it appeared as if the visitors had finally put the game out of reach. But James Bay came charging right back with a dazzling wing-in reverse which sent centre Stu Barber into the corner for one of his two well-deserved tries. Standoff-half Gillie Greig, borrowed for the game from the Castaways club, played an outstanding game for the locals, scoring two tries and setting the Bays away time and again with accurate kicking and shifty moves. With the score favoring the Anti-Assassins by seven points late in the game, Greig burst through, beat one man and had only one other between himself and the goal-line when he slipped and the ball was kicked to safety.

Anti-Assassins winger Bill Hartley, taking advantage of a dropped ball near the sideline, raced away shortly thereafter and scored the tourists' last try, converted by David Barker, who connected on four other converts and two penalty goals for a per-sonal total of 16 points.

For James Bay, back-fielders Greig, Barber, Tom Lippa, Dave Hutchings and Robbins were a well-drilled unit, surprising their oppo-nents with a succession of deep penetrations. Scrum-mers Gary Johnson, who scored the game's first try after only minutes of play, Mick Eckhardt and Ken Wilke drove hard for the whole

For the Anti-Assassins, the game was their first as a unit since the players are selected from an assortment of local clubs in the north of England and Scotland. ## Tiny School Refreshes Memories of Old Days

By LINDA HUGHES Times Staff

Remember the old one-room school house where country kids spent year after year learning their ABCs? And remember the kindly schoolmarm who devoted her life to that tiny school — lavishing wisdom and affection on her charges?

If you'd forgotten how it was in the 'old days' you your memory. That good old-fashioned school and teacher are alive and well just 40 miles from Victoria.

In a little yellow school house across from the beach at Jordan River, Mrs. Eleanor Michelsen teaches the town's 16 elementary students in a class ranging from Grades 1 to 6.

They're a happy bunch at Jordan River Elementary and the children don't look forward to the day they'll have to start climbing on the school bus at 7:30 in the morning for that long trek to junior high school in Sooke.

"I've never been to a big school before," says Mar-garet, one of the two Grade 6 students at the school. "Mrs. Michelsen says we'll be able do more things at Sooke like with the gym - but I like

"I love the country and I love the children," the bouncy, dark-haired teacher says quite frankly, as 16 faces beam back at her proudly.

She's taught at Jordan River for the last 20 years, most of the time as senior teacher in a two-room school.

But, as the town population declined, the school shrank to one room with Mrs. Michelsen left as teacher, principal, PE coach and just about every-

Mrs. Michelsen feels her students probably progress academically much the same as other students, although the younger children probably benefit from joining in on more advanced curriculum while the older children often work more independently.

The two Grade 6 girls enjoy working entirely on their own in social studies and often help the younger students with their reading and math.

In some ways you might say this old-style school follows the modern open-area concept with children working at their own level, helping each other and getting indi-vidual assistance from the teacher when they they need

Times Staff * Criticism of farmers' marketing boards by the organized consumer movement is growing.
"Marketing boards have the potential to impede productivity gains, to slow necessary adjustments, to increase price," the Consumers Association of Canada told the Commons Special-Committee on Food-

The B.C. section of the association reiterated the complaint later in a brief to the provincial government calling for open meetings of the boards and public hearing on their decisions.

While the CAC's demand for changes to marketing board procedure.

while the CAC's defining for changes to make the procedure — as part of a general reform of agricultural marketing policy — is long-standing, it has gained significance with the new militance and power of consumers. For the first time, consumers are confronting, on an almost-equal basis, agencies that farmers have seen as their major in-struments of power in the otherwise unfriendly mar-

The farmers' lobbies in Ottawa and in the provincial capitals have succeeded in convincing gov-ernments also of the cardinal role of marketing boards in the orderly distribution of farm products. In B.C. and most other provinces marketing boards are constituted under special legislation and recently the federal government has set up the National Farm Products Marketing Council to assist in arranging interprovincial marketing agreements between provincial and regional marketing boards.

marketing boards.

B.C. Coast Vegetable Marketing Board is a good exam-ple. It was formed in 1935 by Fraser Valley farmers who found themselves powerless when dealing as individuals with large wholesalers and processors. Like trade unionists, they found they were better able to negotiate with those who provided their real incomes through collective bargaining.

Their bargaining lever was not their power to withhold labor but to control the supply of their products on the mar-

In the case of Coast Vegetable, the board operates through four agencies which are farmer-owned co-operations. These agencies weaktives. These agencies wash, grade and in some cases package and process the prod-ucts of their farmer-members. The board sets the price and determines the flow of the product onto the mar-ket through quotas.

The authority of the board grew considerably with the enactment of the Natural Products Marketing Act of B.C. which requires producers of certain types of erops in the Fraser Valley and Van-couver Island to sell their products through this marketing system.

"It's a kind of compulsory co-operation," says the marketing board's general man-

There are nine other marketing boards in B.C. who exercise the same sort of "compulsory co-operation" over producers of broiler chickens, cramberries, eggs, tree fruits, grapes, milk, oysters and turkeys. (There is also another vegetable marketing board for the Interior.)

Members of each of the boards are elected directly or indirectly by the producers except in the case of the B.C. Milk Marketing Board which

Their briefs argued that control of the supply of product, particularly at the national level, "is a regressive measure directly contrary to all the basic tenets of progressive taxation."

CAC's opposition to the quota system of supply management, which is basic to marketing boards' function, is based on the view that "as a measure to increase the in-come of all producers of a commodity, quota allocation measures which artificially control supply in order to sup-port a predetermined price are considerably less sufficient income transfers on compensatory payments out of (the government's) trea-

But the greater rewards tend to accrue to the larger producer who, because of the economies of scale available to him, tend to need them least; and because of our system of distribution, a very keting chain, in mark-ups at processing, wholesale and re-tail levels, to a very hefty price-hike at the consumer

The Consumers Association, in its official statements, has been careful to link its criticism of marketing boards with an appeal for overall changes to farm support policy in Canada

"Surely we need to do a re-think on the use of subsidies, grants and allocation payments or to consider a new measure which would treat all Canadians equally and bring an end to the distinctions between farm and non-farm dwellers," Mrs. Brechin told

Mrs. Ruth Lotzkar, president of the B.C. section of the association, in an interview with the Times, also stressed the problems of farmers.

As Plants Grow in Spring So Does Aphis Population

As spring growth of plants increases by inches and feet day by day we notice too the increase in aphis population. It seems the two go together — the faster the plant growth, the more aphis we see.

new shoots and extracting Juices from the plant parts. We don't find them on old plant tissue.

The vegetable gardener first sees clusters of black aphis on broad bean tips. The plants are shooting up by inches each day it seems. Because of rapid growth, the aphis are quick to establish themselves on these plants, the first ones arriving as winged specimens from neighboring host plants where they have overwintered. These winged females give rise to the hordes of wingless insects we see during early summer. They move around very slowly but multiply astronomically.

Because they don't rush around we can deal with them fairly easily. On broad beans we either wipe the aphis from each tip or geatly bend the tips into a can of mildly soapy water. Swish around for a moment, go on to the next tip. After five minutes or so rinse the plants with clear hose water.

beans, the new tips can be nipped out, before being infested, thus avoiding some of the trouble.

A lovely plant that usually becomes badly disfigured by green aphis is honeysuckle. Growth of this climber seems to be a foot a day, for in a week it makes terrific headway. Clusters of the aphis appear on every new growth.

It is possible that the flower buds are exceptionally sweet, for it is around these that we find most of the insects. By noticing them as soon as the first few appear, we may prevent a worse condition, for the buds are unable to open to flowering stage after being pierced and sucked by aphis.

A large honeysuckle vine is impossible to deal with by hand, so use the mild soapsud solution as a spray. Direct the spray to the aphis clusters, they must be hit by contact.

Don't forget to rinse the vine with clear water within 10 minutes. Repeat the treatment in two days if more aphis are seen. Those which escape will continue breeding as long as young growth is produced.

In seasons' when more fertilizer is used because of slow ripening effect of days of hot sunshine

On West's opening lead of the spade queen, East "un-blocked" by playing the king. South permitted the king to win. East returned his remaining spade, and once again South played low, West's nine taking the trick. A third spade lead was taken by South's ace, a heart being discarded from dummy, as East discarded a club.

Next came a diamond to dummy's ace, after which a diamond was played back, East perforce taking his king. Declarer was now home free. When he regained the lead, he played the diamond queen, felling West's jack. South's remaining diamond was now a winner. Thus South made one monds, and three clubs.

when he declined to win the second spade lead. He should the diamond suit as he actual ly did. By refusing to win the second spade lead, he gave East an opportunity to be-come a hero: on the third spade lead, East could have discarded the diamond king Had he done so, declarer could not have prevented West from obtaining the lead via the jack or ten of dia-monds, after which West would cash his established

No Being Smug About Car Smog

OTTAWA - Canadians can no longer be smug about lead pollution from their cars— it's here already, environment department studies released here Tuesday prove.

And policemen, taxi drivers, municipal workers and rush-hour commuters may already be suffering physiological effects.

While the effects of such high levels of lead are not expected to endanger lives, they are expected to be sufficiently high to cause a slowing down of the production of hemo-globin, which carries oxygen in the blood in high exposure groups.

There have been an increasing number of reports in recent years about high lead pollu-tion found in a number of major American cities, such as New York and Los Angeles.

Now, federal "exploratory" air pollution studies in three major Canadian cities — Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal — have uncovered higher-than-expected and, more important, higher-than-acceptable levels of lead

The scientists at the environment department conclude that most of the lead almost certainly comes from automobiles burning leaded gasoline. They note that lead pollution levels vary with traffic density and drop off considerably on Saturday.

Toronto leads the pack with an average lead level of 8.4 micrograms per cubic metre of air; Vancouver is a close second with 8.2

Highs in all cities approached three times the average levels, which are several times higher than the danger level is the U.S. of

The environment department report is expected to increase pressure on the federal government to lower and eventually to eliminate lead in gasolines.

The lone vote of Ald, Sam Bawlf has forced Victoria etty ouncil to grant a trade licence to local author Kelly Covin for a sexual gadget store.

"Much more offensive material than that offered by Ultra Love Products is on sale under existing trade licences, and I feel we should not penalize this man for his bonesty in coming forward with an application," Bawlf said.

Under city procedure, a unanimous vote is required to reject a trade licence application. Bawlf voted against earlier this month, and the motion was re-introduced Thursday by Mayor Peter Pollen, with Bawlf sticking to his position.

"I have visited the Ultra Love outlet in Vancouver, which I don't think any other member of council has, and it is not offensive." Bawlf said, repeating his conviction that a Victoria branch would go out of business within three months because of lack of local support.

Ald. Mike Young argued that tourist business might support the sex store, even though local support was not forthcoming. He added that although offensive material might already be on sale, it had not been specifically approved under an individual trade licence.

mayor-Pollen said granting a licence amounted to "recognizing a state of Sodom and Gommorrah."

Covin says he will be in business within 30 days of getting his licence. Ultra Love Products, a franchise chain, manufactures gadgets designed to increase sexual stimulation. Covin says most of his customers will be middle-aged.

MAIDS WANTED, EXPERIENCE YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

Weed a Cancer-Cure Hope

Dr. S. Morris Kupchan of the University of Virginia, and others, have found in the roots of a weed a chemical which blocks the growth of an intramuscular tumor in rats. The chemical, thalicarpine, is found naturally in Wisconsin meadow rue, a weed found in abundance near railroad tracks.

Efforts to synthesize the essential chemical in the laboratory have now been successful, and a one-to two-year testing period involving human beings is planned, under the auspices of the National Cancer Institute.

thought faunce institute.

Thalicarpine is one of the multitude of natural substances that are screened each year in a search for anticancer activity. This should encourage the many people who doubt that scientists are trying enough substances in the search for a cure for cancer.

When a plant does show possibilities as an anti-cancer drug, an extract of the plant is examined in a tissue culture of cells an extract of the plant is examined in a tissue culture of cells from human cancer tumor and in several tumors taken from rats. If it stops the growth of the cancer cells it is further broken down into "fractions," to see just which part of the plant is effective. It is then studied in dogs and monkeys, to see if there are toxic (poisonous) effects.

If the drug is judged to be safe by the Food and Drug Administration, on the basis of these tests, then it is tested on humans ready for marketing, but I write about it here to show people that the cancer researchers are hunting everywhere for a cure

DELAYING TOWER IS FOR THE BIRDS

TORONTO (CP) - Civic authorities have decided to withhold a permit for building Canadian National Railways' projected 1,800-foot tower on the waterfront until its danger to birds can be determined.

The buildings and development committee voted to hold up the building permit until it receives a report from the On-tario Federation of Naturalists on how to reduce the hazard

Ground has already been broken for the communications tower which, its builders claim, will be the world's tallest self-supporting structure. "Toronto is on a flight path and a lot of birds are killed already flying into the Toronto-Dominion Centre," said Ald. John Sewell. "Maybe the naturalists can suggest some way to make the CN tower less offensive to birds."

The 54-storey Toronto-Dominion Centre in downtown Toronto has been blamed in past migration seasons for the death of thousands of birds which have crashed into it.

Anti-NDP Front Swells In Manitoba

WINNIPEG (CP) — Speculation about an anti-NDP front in some provincial ridings continues amid a bevy of conflicting reports about where coalition efforts might Both Conservative leader Sidney Spivak and Liberal-leader I. H. Asper have ruled out any massive joint effort aimed at toppling the government of Premier Ed Schreyer later this year, but have confirmed that discussions are taking place in several ridings.

To date, the only confirmed effort is in the northern riding of The Pas, were former Liberal candidate George Takashima now is running as an Independent with both Liberal and Conservative support.

Asper said the possibility of a united front against the NDP exists in the premier's riding of Rossmere, as well as in St. Boniface and Selkirk, both held by cabinet min-isters.

Spokesmen for constituency associations in Selkirk, Gimli and St. George have denied reports about coalition negoti-ations. Spokesmen in Rosson the possibilities.

Meanwhile, similar possibilities were raised Thursday in the Winnipeg riding of Well-ington and dashed in Thomp-ther confused in recent weeks by the activity of the Group for good government, which is seeking to endorse single candidates to oppose the

SCHREYER ACCUSED OF FIGURE SHUFFLE

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba government was accused Thursday of misleading the public with regard to population statistics and of using an inflated population figure to get an additional $8.2 million in federal funds. Conservative Inez Trueman told the legislature that Premier Ed Schreyer stated in April the population of the province was 1,115,000, based on Manitoba Health Services Commission calculations. The health department's annual report for 1972 actually shows a population of 992,000 at the end of last year and the premier now expects Manitobans to believe the population jumped by 23,000 in the first four months of 1973, she claimed.

EDMONTON (CP) — Labor Minister Bert Hohol said Thursday in the legislature that he will study the possibility of allowing people to opt out of union membership for special reasons. The Social Credit opposition lost an attempt to allow persons with closely-held religious convictions to challenge in the courts closed-shop requirements which oblige an employee to be a member of a particular union.

Owners Could Be Liable

EDMONTON (CP) — If a child trespasses on commercial property and injures himself, the owner or renter of the property could be liable for damages under a government bill introduced Thursday in the legislature. When they have "knowledge of facts from which a reasonable man would infer that children are present, or that their presence is so probably that the occupier should conduct himself on the assumption that they are present."

Abortion Cutoff Sought

EDMONTON (CP) — The Alberta Health Care Insurance
Commission would cease to pay for the costs of authorized abortions — except under special circumstances — under a private member's bill introduced Thursday in the legislature. The Federal Criminal Code currently permits therapeutic abortions in cases where a hospital committee decides that the physical or mental well being of the mother would be endangered by continuation of the pregnancy.

Murder Charges Dropped

REGINA (CP) — The Crown has dropped non-capital murder charges against Ben Quon, 42, and Tom Chow Yee, 39, two Regina men charged in the shooting and clubbing death of Mervin Matchuik Jan. 21. A third man, 33-year-old Harold Junior of Regina has been committed for trial on a charge of pro-capital. a charge of non-capital murder in the death of Matchuik. A preliminary hearing for Quon and Yee opened Thursday on a reduced charge of possession of stolen cigarettes.

Leslie Nielsen Hosts Five-Part BBC-TV Series

Leslie Nielsen, an actor fa-miliar to Canadian television audiences for more than two decades, will act as host for audiences for more than two decades, will act as host for Tom Brown's Schooldays, which makes its debut on the CEC-TV network on Sunday, May 13, at 8 p.m. Filmed in nineteenth century costume, and at appropriate settings for each of the five episodes, Nielsen will background the historical significance of the programs. programs.
"I'm delighted to take part

"I'm delighted to take part in this series," he says, "because the acting and production are so exceptionally good. All the roles have been perfectly cast, and for an actor like myself they're a joy to watch."

The BBC series is based on

The BBC series is based on the classic novel by Thomas Hughes which was written in 1857. It follows 13-year-old Tom Brown through his days at Rugby boarding school in England and tells the story of boyhood friendship, loyalty and honor, as well as mischief, bullying and sometimes brutality. Anthony Murphy, a British schoolboy making his first appearance on television, is featured in the title role, with Iain Cutherbertson as the headmaster, Dr. Arnold, and Richard Morant as the bully, Flashman.

The locales for each of Nielsen's introductions have been carefully chosen to give the flavor of the period and furnish additional information for Canadian audiences. One, for instance, was filmed at Black Creek Pioneer Village, just outside of Toronto, and Nielsen describes what it might have been like to have been a Canadian teacher in this area in 1828, the year of Tom's first days at Rugby. Other introductions are set in facsimiles of an English pub and an English country garden.

Edmanton-born, and brothen of Yukon MP Erik Nielsen, Leslie Nielsen began his acting career with the start of Canadian television in the early fifties. "Television was a great training ground in those early days," he says. "The pressure of live drama forced you to learn your craft thoroughly, and allowed you to make contributions to all areas of a production, including the writing and directing." He now works in and out of Hollywood, dividing his time between television and films, and can currently be seen in the hit movie The Poseidon Adventure, which recently won an Academy Award for special effects.

OTTAWA - Fisheries Minister Jack Davis warned Thursday that Canada will outfish the United States until it hurts if the Americans push Canadian fishboats out of U.S. waters.

He said Canada will adopt these tactics if necessary to force the Americans back to the negotiating table to work out a satisfactory new fishing agreement on the Pacific But Davis refused in an interview to discuss the possi-bility that Canadian fishboats could be arrested for fishing in U.S. waters after the present agreement expires June 15.

And Liberal MPs in the House of Commons refused the required unanimous consent to send the looming west coast salmon war to a House committee for investigation.

Frank Howard (NDP - Skeena) tried to send the matter to a committee on the grounds that once the present igreement expires, Canadians who now can fish outside the three-mile limit but within the 12-mile limit along the Washington and Oregon coasts could be arrested.

Fraser River catch.

Davis stated Wednesday that the hard line taken by the U.S. at Seattle in connection with the Fraser River salmon fishery was the same taken in Washington a month earlier. At that time, he said, the U.S. showed it wanted to push Canadian fishermen out of U.S. waters on both the East and West coasts.

The minister said that Canada doesn't agree with the U.S. position that it should be entitled to half the Fraser River eatch simply because the U.S. shared with Canada construction of a bypass at the Hells Gate slide in the early 1940s.

BILL FOR B.C.

By IAIN HUNTER Times Ottawa Bureau

Environment Minister Jack Davis stated Thursday that the federal government will bill B.C. Hydro for $2.5 million as the cost of saving the Athabasca Delta in Northern Alberta which was damaged by construction of the W. A. C. Bennett Dam.

He said in an interview that he expects B.C. to pay the bill since the province stands to benefit from the establishment of a Mackenzie River system management board which Davis proposes to set up in the future.

The minister said that a stone weir, costing about $1 million, will be constructed on the main stem of the Athabaska within a year. He added that experts have said that this would put the Athabasca Delt "bok in state of nature."

The Commune That Died From Lack of Know-How

The organic gardening commune out our way, about which I enthused last year around this time, is no more. There were anywhere from eight to a dozen young men and women on the occasions when I visited them, convinced that they could make ends meet by selling their produce in town. They were just as wrong as wrong can be. The income did not begin to meet the expenses. They've gone their separate

That, it seems, has been the disillusioning experience of a number of these return-to-nature experiments that I thought to be so admirable and that, in fact, worked mighty well in every aspect except the economic.

One perhaps inevitable result is that the back-to-the-land movement by a younger generation, a healthy balance to the three out of four farm children who continue to desert the rural areas for the city, has slowed to a trickle. "Organic gardening," itself, once the attraction, no longer has the ap-

Time was, because I'd written so often about it, when I' received at least a couple of letters every day asking for advice on how to go about locating in the country, letters of such tremendous naivete and idealism that I felt downright guilty in giving a practical, realistic answer. Now it's a rare week when there's even one such letter.

If the organic growing idea was just a passing phase it's a pity because, without that motivation, there will be many young men — and young women, too — who may remain to-tally unaware that life on the farm still has much to offer as a career and as a style of living.

My advice now, as it was then, is simply that there's no great difficulty in finding out if that's what they really want. One summer on a farm provides that answer. Already there's the usual "Help Wanted" ads for summer-help. The wages are small by city standards. But the experience is still worth a silo of gold.

Those young people I've sent that way and who have told me about their experiences have learned two things that, it seems, were not learned by the eager amateurs in the commune I admired.

One is that "farming" is a mighty loose word for what would be more fittingly called the profession of agriculture. As much as any industry it demands new methods, new techniques, specializing and acquired skills, very often repugnant to the lad who thinks you simply put the seed in the ground and stand back to wait for the miracle.

The second fact-of-life that's learned is that farming takes an education. Old-time farmers, like old-time newspa-permen, may scoff at the need for university training. But wherever you go in the country these days you'll find that the real pioneering is most often the work of the graduates in ag-

The boys who are leaving the farms are usually in a revolt against old-fashioned, traditional methods and unaware, perhaps, that the challenge to them, as it is to the city

boy, is to progress with the times.

When we lived in the country one of our neighbors was a poultryman whose son had fought with just such an agonizing decision. The father scraped together enough to send him to decision. The father scraped together enough to send him to an agriculture college more as a compromise than anything else. He took the attitude that it would do the boy no harm and that, when it was over, he might come back and carry on the business. The boy came back, right enough, but not passively. He came back with ideas and experiments and the kind of production evolution that may be found in most aspects of farm life today. The father resisted, but not for long. Today they're equal partners in a thriving business that owes as much to the old man's years of sacrifice and labor as it does to the young man's ambition and education.

It's not an example, I concede, that applies to directly to the city boy dreaming of a new life out there in the green pastures. He'll have to start from scratch. But it shows, I think, that country life is no more static than life here among

Apart from such considerations I'm completely convinced that, all things being equal, the man in the country gets more out of life than the man in the city.

The late Lew Gordon, the greatest city editor for whom I ever worked and a man who, himself, retired to the sticks to breed mink, once told me that his primary aim in life was total independence. "I never want to be in a position where I can't tell anyone to go to hell," as he put it.

Well, it's true that the farmer is just as dependent on the whims of regional or national economics and more dependent than the rest of us on the whims of the weather. But it is

than the rest of us on the whims of the weather. But it is true, too, that he has that priceless sense of self-reliance that so few of us ever enjoy in city life.

"I grow things that people eat," a farmer once told me in what may be the definitive statement, "and people always

This seems to me the basic reason that country people often appear to get more out of life. Independence is the root of their philosophy. It gives them a purpose and an integrity that is their own. The boys and girls at the organic gardening

Witnesses to the bizarre holdup and explosion Thursday which scattered bits of flesh, broken glass and bank notes within a 300-foot area of the branch of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce on Main Street said they heard one or possibly two shots before the explosion.

Kenora chief C. W. Engstrom, however, refused to confirm that police had fired at the bandit. But Insp. W. J. Mychalyshyn, head of the Ontario Provincial Police investigation in the case, said it had been confirmed that one police bullet struck the man before he blasted himself and the loot he carried with a six-stick dynamite bomb strapped around him.

The holdup man had warned manager Al Reid of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce that the bomb would detonate if anything happened to him.

It was wired to what he called a "dead man's switch," a clothespin-like device he al-ternately held pinched in his hand or clenched in his teeth.

The blast came about 30 seconds after the gunman left the bank, preceded by Con-stable Don Milliard who was to drive the get-away truck the man had ordered.

the old oneroom school house where country kids spent year after year learning their ABCs?

And remember the kindly choolmarm who devoted her life to that tiny school — la-vishing wisdom and affection on her charges?

If you'd forgotten how it was in the 'old days' you haven't far to go to refresh your memory. That good old-fashioned school and teacher are alive and well just 40, miles from Victoria.

In a little yellow school house across from the beach at Jordan River, Mrs. Elean-or Michelsen teaches the town's 16 elementary students in a class ranging from Grades 1 to 6.

They're a happy bunch at Jordan River Elementary and the children don't look forward to the day they'll have to start climbing on the school bus at 7:30 in the morning for that long trek to junior high school in Sooke.

"Tve never been to a big school before," says Mar-garet, one of the two Grade 6 students at the school. "Mrs. Michelsen says we'll be able to do more things at Sooke — like with the gym — but I like

"I love the country and I love the children," the bouncy, dark-haired teacher says quite frankly, as 16 faces beam back at her proudly. She's taught at Jordan River for the last 20 years, most of the time as senior teacher in a two-room school.

But, as the town population declined, the school shrank to one room with Mrs. Michelsen thing rolled into one.
